Dear Bill:

Thank you ever so much for your directionalized lists for reading. With a little more opportunity for sustained reading I can see the wiseness of your choice. I found when writing notes to accompany books I forwarded before receiving your letter, that it seemed desirable to make a different selection for the " prelude " in each case and depending on the estimated receptivity of the recipient.

In my reading I had passed over para 3. Contact personalities and Progress Helpers, and the references on page 1258. Now that attention has been drawn to manner of approach-page 215 - one can see something of the reason for the arrangement of the papers for printing and the attention to this , directed by the Card, is I think, extremely valuable.

In the selection I made, a copy of which is herewith, I assumed that people would want to know something about the origin of the papers, then the origin of their habitat, the development to human status and the available assistance in making progress; how progress would be made, conditions to be met on the way , and the life hereafter. But perhaps that is just an explorers point of view.

From replies already received it seems likely that it will be possible to set up a small study group in this neighbourhood. I will let you know of this as it develops. As to the next visit to Chicago, it seems likely that I will not pass through that city until January when I will be on my way to Alaska. I hope that it will be possible, but I am not sure that it will be possible, to stay over a day at that time.

With best regards to you and your family
